1. On the evening of 27 May the Friedman Restaurant in Apatin (a Yugoslav town approximately twenty kilometers from the Hungarian border) was reportedly the scene of a dinner attended by a group of some twenty Hungarians and Yugoslavs, including two alleged UDB representatives. The dinner was reportedly arranged by the latter. The restaurant was reserved for their exclusive use and other customers were not allowed to enter. Outside the restaurant were parked four cars: A Buick with Serbian registration and a Yugoslav flag, a jeep with Yugoslav registration, and two Russian-made Pobedas with Hungarian registrations and Hungarian flags. The cars were not under guard, but a Yugoslav soldier and a man in civilian clothes were posted inside the restaurant, presumably to keep the public out.
2. The wife of the restaurant proprietor stated on the following day that the restaurant had been closed to the public because some Yugoslav officials were entertaining Hungarian officials from Budapest. She further stated that the atmosphere of the dinner was extremely convivial and that there were numerous friendly speeches and toasts by both Yugoslavs and the Hungarians. A Hungarian (sic) orchestra played for singing and dancing until the party concluded at 3 a.m.
